Itinerary 2 - SEČOVLJE SALT PANS

Map

Description of the itinerary.

Name of the place to visit: Brief history and main features at historical, cultural and touristic level

The salt pans in Slovenia

On the short Slovenian Coast, there are today only a few coastal wetlands, pertaining to the short deltas of the Istrian rivers and brooks. At one time there were more, as the delta marshes and bays were shaped into the salt pans that were to be found on the verges of all the coastal towns (salt pans in Koper, Izola, Strunjan, Lucija and Sečovlje).

Nowadays, the salt pans exist only in Strunjan and Sečovlje. Besides these, also considered to be a part of the coastal marsh wetlands are the Strunjan lagoons (Stjuža and Pretočna), both of the Fiesa lakes, the Škocjan marshes and the delta of the Rižana River. All the Slovenian coastal wetlands are thus the work of human endeavour, but still in concordance with nature.

The Sečovlje salt pans are today the largest of the coastal marsh wetlands (650 hectares), and at the same time, the most important Slovenian locality from the ornithological point of view. The variety of bird species in this area, from the aspect of nesting and wintering, is much larger than in any other comparable locality of its kind.

To date, 272 bird species have been established in the Sečovlje Salina, with some 90 breeders among them. On the basis of these facts, the Government of the Republic of Slovenia in 2001 proclaimed the area the Sečovlje Salina Nature Park and the Museum of Salt-making a cultural monument of national importance.
